

About Stacy Lieberman

An innovative and inclusive leader, Stacy Lieberman is an expert in the dynamic field of arts and culture in Los Angeles. Soon to be the president and CEO of the Library Foundation of Los Angeles beginning June 6, Stacy has more than 20 years of experience in senior leadership positions at iconic L.A. arts, non-profit, and educational institutions such as The Broad, the Autry Museum of the American West, and the Skirball Cultural Center. Building on an early career in book publishing, she has dedicated her professional life to sharing stories and welcoming visitors and students of all ages and backgrounds to experience educational, arts, and cultural opportunities. A mission-driven, collaborative, and leading-edge executive, she is known for enhancing the narratives of public institutions to help them engage more broadly with local communities. She has a track record of success in building awareness and support, expanding access, prioritizing equity, and developing mutually beneficial partnerships. She serves on a number of boards, including the Downtown Center Business Improvement District, and her work has been recognized by the Los Angeles Area Emmy Awards, the Los Angeles Business Journal, the American Alliance of Museums, and Independent Publisher, among others. Stacy received a bachelor's degree cum laude in English and French from Tufts University and a master's degree in English from Wayne State University.
